1. In March 1951 a three-month artillery cadre training class was opened in the Kwangtung Military District. Upon completion of the course, the first class was assigned in June to various units. In July the second class, with an enrollment of 650 officers and men, began at Hutiehkang (蝴蝶崗), Whampoa. Training in the use of 50 mm anti-aircraft guns and 75 mm semi-automatic mountain guns is included in the course. On 23 July the class held a demonstration reviewed by 13 high-ranking Chinese Communist officers and 4 Soviets. Twenty-three officers, including 6 Japanese and 10 Soviets, assembled with the cadres at the drill ground for the demonstration.

2. On 25 July, 9,000 volunteers for the public security division in Kwangtung were escorted to Canton and assembled at the Yent'ang (燕塘) drill ground in Shaho (沙河), Canton. The men assembled in a triangle with 20 rows on each side, each row consisting of 150 men. A total of 350 Chinese Communist officers were on hand, and, after a roll call by the officers, the volunteers were assigned to responsible personnel of the public security division who had come to escort them to their units.

3. In early August, YEH Chien-ying, chairman of the Kwangtung government, ordered the recruiting of 200,000 militia in the Kwangtung Military District in order to create a militia detachment in each hsien which would be attached directly to the military districts. The three month training period was to be divided into two categories: military and political training of those to be absorbed into regular military units, and political education of those to be used for the suppression of spies, guerrilla forces, and other anti-Communists. By 10 August the militia had been assembled in the following eleven districts for training:

a. Ch'enghai (116-44, 23-29) and Changlin (116-48, 23-36) -- for militia from Ch'enghai, Changlin, Jaop'ing (116-48, 23-58), Nanao (117-16, 23-22), and Ch'aoan (116-37, 23-42).
